

OSCAR Model of Change

Stage of the OSCAR Model	Description	Questions to Ask
Outcome (The destination/goal)	The coach helps the client clarify the outcome the client wants related to the issue the client has raised.	• What would you like to achieve from today's session? (Short-term outcome) • What is your desired long-term outcome? • What would long-term success look like? What would be different?
Situation (The starting point, which increases energy for change)	The coach gets clarity regarding where point, which increases the client is right now. The purpose is to raise the awareness of the client. It is important to remember that the questioning in this section is for the benefit of the client, not the coach.	• What is the current situation? • What is actually happening? • Who is involved? • What makes it an issue now? • What are your feelings around this issue? • Ideally, where would you like to be with this?
Choice and Consequences (The options)	The coach helps the client generate as many alternative courses of action as possible, increasing his or her awareness about the consequences (benefits and drawbacks) of each choice. As in motivational interviewing, the client needs to determine what is the best option—and why.	• What have you already tried? • Which choices do you have? • Which options can you choose from? • What are the consequences of each choice? • Which choices have the best consequences?
Actions (The detailed plan)	The coach helps the client review the options generated, clarify the steps forward, and take responsibility for the client's action plan. The coach may also assign the client "homework" to be completed prior to their next session.	• Which actions will you take? • What is the first step? • How will you take it? • When will you do it, and with whom? • On a scale of 1 to 10, how willing are you to take these actions? • How might you sabotage yourself?

Review (Making sure you are on track)	The coach helps the client check that he or she is on course. This step helps the coach to be fully informed about what the client is doing and what progress is being made. Monitoring can involve a variety of methods, including charts, measurements on a Likert scale (evaluating behavior change over time on a scale of 1–10), photos (before and now) to record progress, and self-reporting via writing by the client.	• How will you review your progress? • Which measures will you take? • When are we going to get together to review it? • Which action are you actually taking? • How far will the actions move you toward your outcome?
