

Discrepancy Identifier Worksheet

Instructions

Values guide goals and are origins of what we consider desirable behavior. However, values are not always thought about, so it is useful to identify what values are important to you. Complete the Discrepancy Identifier Worksheet by answering the questions and discuss with your Nutrition Coach.

Begin Here!

Take a look at the figure below. A person has a goal of losing 20 pounds. Let's start by asking why that goal is important to the person. They may generate an answer that it is important because they want to be healthier. Well, why is it important to be healthier? Maybe they can connect losing weight to being healthier which will make them a better parent. This is something that they value. For the next outline use the flow chart as a guide to find your WHY?

1. What is your goal?

When we identify what our core values are and how they will help us reach our goals, our behaviors gain meaning. For example, I'm taking the stairs over the elevator, because it will help me meet my value of being a healthy person. I'm foregoing fast food, not to torture myself with temptation, but to live up to be the healthy person I want to be.

2. Now that we have identified why your goal is important, why don't you write down, on a scale of 0 to 10 with 0 being not at all consistent and 10 being 100% consistent; how in line your behaviors are with your values?

3. Is there anything else you would like to add about your goal and values?

4. Imagine that you are already at your goal. What does that person look like? What would they (you) have been doing differently than what you are currently doing?

5. Now that you have identified why your goal is important to you and the behaviors you should be doing, write down times when you foresee your behaviors not matching up to your goals.

6. Going back to question 2, think about the number you gave on a scale of 0 to 10. Why do you think your number wasn't any lower?

7. Now that we have identified why your goal is important to you and the behaviors you should be doing to align to it, write down how the behaviors that aren't helping you fit into achieving your long-term goals.

That's it!

After completing the Discrepancy Identifier Worksheet, discuss your answers with your nutrition coach.
