

IMPOSTER SYNDROME ACTION PLAN

1. Step 1: Remind yourself that imposter syndrome is normal.

Even career coaches and industry leaders experience the feeling of imposter syndrome decades into their career. Normalizing, naming, and understanding this is the first step to dealing with it.

2. Step 2: Actively seek out building skills in areas you feel unsure of.

Competence leads to confidence so take courses, engage in workshops, and practice the skills you feel you are lacking or weak in.

3. Step 3: Eliminate the unnecessary.

Overly complicated and advanced methods are often ineffective and can reduce your feelings of competence. Lean on the basics and focus on results over complexity.

4. Step 4: Follow your systems.

Go back to the systems you built for your business. Those were built because you know they work. Instead of trying to create new approaches, rely on what you know works in the systems and frameworks you built.

5. Step 5: Review the Proof

Review your client success stories, reviews, testimonials, and referrals. True professional confidence comes from the stack of evidence you accumulate that shows you are who you say you are. Each small win is a piece of that story.

Notes

