

Part IV: Meal Prep Cooking

Chicken

Chicken, a meal prepping staple, is easy to cook and is relatively inexpensive to purchase. Cooking and eating chicken day in and day out can make this protein source feel bland, making it difficult to eat in large quantities. In this video, Chris demonstrates how he prepares chicken and shares his tips and flavor preferences when bulk-cooking.

Chris's Key Takeaways

Slicing chicken breasts into similar thicknesses can ensure even cooking on the cooktop, minimizing over or undercooking portions of the breast meat.

Remove fat via shears or knife before cooking chicken breast.

Changing cooking methods mid-prep could change or offset yield. Be consistent.

Be mindful of contaminating surfaces and utensils after touching chicken.

Avoid adding flavor enhancers while bulk-cooking chicken breast to accommodate preference changes.

Using a lid when cooking chicken breast on the cooktop can ensure proper and thorough cooking at 165°F.

The average cooking time per evenly sliced breast usually takes 2-4 minutes per side on medium heat.

Spread cooked chicken breast on a plate or stack them on the inside walls of a bowl for effective and timely cooling.
