

One major obstacle faced with meal prepping is planning for the unexpected. Not having alternative meal prep solutions when there is a lack of time or ingredients can result in eating off plan. In this video, Chris discusses his solutions to this problem by providing a list of key ingredients he keeps stocked, readily available, and easy to fall back on when eating a prepped meal is not an option.

Chris's Key Takeaways

Incorporate frozen fruits when making protein shakes to increase their micronutrient density.

Using high-quality protein isolate has fewer fillers and fat, aiding in better digestion.

Stocking ready-to-eat prep-friendly foods will minimize the risk of going off plan.

Pairing canned fish with precooked rice, avocado, and frozen broccoli can be an easy go-to meal.

Liquid snacks or meals, such as shakes, digest faster which will leave the individual hungry sooner.

Pairing peanut butter and bread together completes the protein source.

Measure protein powders via scale vs. using the provided scoops to ensure accuracy.

Fresh vs. frozen fruits have no micronutrient differences and should be purchased based on preference.

Adding peanut butter to shakes is a good flavor option but will often overpower the flavor of any added fruits.

Peanuts have more protein per ounce compared to almonds or cashews.

Choose prep-friendly convenience foods that are easy to measure including bread, fruits, and nuts when there is little time to portion.
