

Part II: Preferences and Planning

Often considered one of the most difficult aspects of meal prepping, proper planning is an essential skill required to minimize having to go off-plan. During this video, Chris discusses planning basics and how simple steps can be employed to help prepare for the unexpected.

Chris's Key Takeaways

Plan and cook in 3-day segments to ensure food remains fresh and enjoyable.

When possible, portion food at the time of consumption to enable combination versatility or changes in flavor preference.

Always pack an extra meal when leaving home to avoid having to eat off-plan.

Use glass over plastic and proper container size for storing and traveling with food.

Use ceramic or paper plates when reheating food, avoiding plastic containers when using the microwave.
