

License-Free Music Sources

There are numerous resources available for podcast hosts to find license-free music that they can use in their episodes without worrying about copyright issues. Some popular sources for license-free music include:

- Free Music Archive: Offers a vast collection of high-quality, royalty-free music that podcasters can use for free
- YouTube Audio Library: Provides a diverse selection of music tracks and sound effects that are free to use in videos and podcasts
- Epidemic Sound: Offers a subscription-based service that provides access to a vast library of high-quality music tracks that can be used in podcasts with a valid subscription

Music Sources for Purchase Sites

For wellness and fitness podcasters looking for premium-quality music or specific tracks, purchasing music licensing is an option. This involves obtaining a license from the rights holder or a music licensing agency to use the music in podcasts. Prices for music licensing can vary depending on factors such as the duration of use, the type of license, and the popularity of the music. Some platforms where podcast hosts can purchase music licensing include:

- Artlist: Offers a subscription-based service that provides access to a curated library of music tracks for use in podcasts, videos, and other projects
- PremiumBeat: Provides a wide selection of high-quality music tracks for purchase, with prices varying based on the type of license and usage rights required
- AudioJungle: Offers a marketplace for royalty-free music tracks, sound effects, and audio files that can be purchased individually or through subscription packages