

Free giveaways are a great way to generate excitement around your business and attract clients who may otherwise not be looking for your services. But giving away just anything won't work. Before you start making homemade coupons, use the following guidance to be strategic with your freebies.

Thought Starters

- What do clients come to you for, specifically?
- Why do clients hire you?
- What are people eager to learn from you?
 - If you're not sure, a survey or poll is a great way to find out.

Pro Tip

Check social media insights to see which topics have performed well for you.

With these thoughts in mind, write down a few ideas of what you can teach a client. Think step one or two of working with you.

Pro Tip

Stuck? Check out what others in your niche offer and add your own spin.

Picking Your Presentation

Now that you have some ideas, it's time to pick a way to present your freebie! Here are a few examples to get you started in the right direction.

- Consider a webinar or an e-course if you're teaching something.
- A 5- or 7-day challenge is perfect for a check-in or habit-builder.
 - Delivery could be through admission to a closed group, a text message marketing service, or automated emails.
- PDF downloads work great for tip sheets, resource guides or checklists, recipe ideas, or sample workout programs.

With these thoughts in mind, write down a few initial ideas for presentation that align with your freebie offering.

Keep Them Coming Back for More

How can you help ensure that new subscribers see a tangible result from your freebie? That's a question that doesn't have just one answer. Here are a few things to consider putting in place to make sure people actually use your freebie.

- Provide a completion incentive that can help participants continue their success by working with you.
- Select an email autoresponder software or text message marketing service to help keep prospective clients engaged.
 - Recommended email autoresponder software: MailChimp, Aweber, Active Campaign, or Convert Kit
 - Recommended text message marketing service: Community

With these thoughts in mind, take time to write down a few strategies you might use to keep new clients engaged after using your freebie.

Get It Right No Matter What

Once you're done developing, it's time to make sure what you've got to offer is appealing. The only way to find out is to ask. You can do that by testing your offer and strategy on current clients or friends and family.

- Ensure that all automated emails and links work.
- Get feedback. What worked well? Where can you improve?
- Make any needed adjustments.

Let It Go!

Now that you've strategically developed your offer, it's time to release your freebie into the world! But don't just let it sit there. Use these tips (and get creative with your own ideas) to maximize your launch excitement—and maybe even extend it beyond launch.

- Make your freebie impossible to miss on your website with callouts, bold text, bold photos or graphics, or even a pop-up.
- Offer it at least once a week on your social media channels.
- Add a link to your templated YouTube caption, shout it out in Instagram stories, or share it to your Facebook group.

With these tips in mind, take time to write down a few strategies for how you'll shamelessly promote your freebie!

